Plan for your future and theirs.

What is a legacy gift?

You create a legacy gift when you:

- name the San Francisco Conservatory of Music as a beneficiary in your will, trust, life insurance policy, retirement account or other estate plan.
- include the San Francisco Conservatory of Music in a planned gift that pays you income, such as a pooled income fund or charitable remainder trust.

Legacy gifts are mutually beneficial. You and your loved ones may enjoy tax or income advantages, and our students will receive the support they need to fulfill their unique talents.

Create Your Legacy

Legacy gifts offer unique benefits to you and those you love. Include the San Francisco Conservatory of Music in your plans and you will support the future of music – in your lifetime and beyond.

As a professional musician, I have a special interest in keeping the world supplied with talented and well-trained artists. Including the Conservatory in my legacy plans is one way to help that vital pipeline flow freely for future generations.

– Laura McLellan, long-time cellist of the Cincinnati Symphony

Be Celebrated

The Ada Clement Legacy Society, named for one of the Conservatory's founders, honors individuals who have included the San Francisco Conservatory of Music in estate and financial plans. Membership entitles you to complimentary admission to performances, invitations to events, special recognition, and more.

We are happy that we will be part of the important cultural role of the Conservatory for many years. It is an apt expression of our appreciation whenever we see and hear the amazing talent of the students and the world-class musical training they receive.

– Linda and Frank Kurtz

Support Excellence

When you remember the San Francisco Conservatory of Music, you provide financial support for the next generation of musicians. With your help, great music and exceptional musicians will live on.
